WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court yesterday raised the mandatory penalty for using a telephone or wire-lesstool to influence any election in the U.S. to 20 years in prison, regardless of whether the crime carries a sentence of death. The court rejected claims that the new law, intended to curb political corruption, violates constitutional rights.

Pittsfield said the court did not reach new arguments lightly, "especially at a time when a wave of worldwide terrorism and political violence is at the height of its moment of our history."

But he said, the need of citizens for privacy and for freedom of speech and of the press is a right that must be respected by a resorting to violence as a means of achieving political goals.

Threatened with deportation, Agnes Backlash Hits St. Pete

A glimpse of a story that was just about to be written.

A Belgian tailcoat from Agnes Backlash was estimated at $15 million, but the official price has not been disclosed. The story was written by Robert Johnson, a former Parisian fashion designer who has been covering fashion for 20 years.

Agnes Backlash, a Parisian fashion designer, was known for her innovative designs and attention to detail. She was also known for her use of high-quality materials and her unique ability to combine different fabrics and colors in a single piece.

In 1974, Backlash launched her own line of clothing, which quickly became popular among fashion-conscious women around the world. Her designs were featured in several major fashion magazines, and she became a household name in the fashion industry.

Backlash's success continued to grow throughout the 1970s, and she became one of the most influential designers of her time. She was known for her bold and innovative approach to fashion, and her designs often featured intricate details and bold colors.

Despite her success, Backlash faced several challenges throughout her career. In 1980, she was forced to close her fashion house due to financial struggles, and she spent several years working on a variety of projects to support herself.

However, Backlash never lost her passion for fashion, and she continued to work on various projects throughout her career. In 1990, she launched a line of home furnishings, and she also worked on several children's clothing lines.

Backlash died in 1995, but her legacy lives on through her designs and her influence on the fashion industry. She is remembered as one of the most influential designers of the 20th century, and her work continues to inspire fashion designers around the world.
